A spoonful of honey a day could prevent deadly infections from developing as new research shows that Life Mel, a special type of honey, wards off life threatening bugs by boosting the body's natural defences. Life Mel is the result of over thirty years' research and has been specially developed to provide the recognised nutritional benefits of pure honey in combination with specific herbs and other natural ingredients.

For many years now various forms of honey have been renowned for their antiseptic, healing properties, but it is the active ingredients contained within this highly effective immune boosting formulation which enable the immune system to better fight any invaders to the body. Life Mel is particularly valuable for chemotherapy patients since it has been shown to improve white blood count levels.

Life Mel is produced in a controlled environment by bees fed on a special nectar mixture derived from therapeutic herbs including Siberian Ginseng, Echinacea and Uncaria Tomentosa, combined with a selection of iron, protein and vitamins. This formula enables the bees to produce a unique form of honey which retains all of the original beneficial properties of the herbs and natural ingredients. What's more, this unique honey is free from any form of artificial treatment or added ingredients after its extraction from the hive.

Recommended use: Two 5g teaspoons a day: one in the morning on an empty stomach and one last thing at night. The honey should be sucked slowly.

Life Mel has a distinctive flavour and pleasant aroma.

Life Mel Honey is priced at £45.00 for 113g (which includes postage and packaging) and is available online at www.lifemel.co.uk. Details of your nearest stockist can be found online or by telephoning 0207 247 5497.
